GOSSIP OF THE TURF.

There's a lot of josh and jolly in all human careers of action. Much of it is expended about the turf. One turfman rubs the other turfman's back and expects a rub in return. False conditions come out of this game of admire-me-and-I'll-admire-you. They do not help the sport. It would be far better if every fellow would hoe his own row and do the best he could with what he had. Wherever there's a "fix" some "fixer" has "a shade" and "a shade" is usually unnatural and abnormally dishonest. The result of every-day trying is more regular to general result and worth more of an all-around effort.

DAILY RACING FORM tries hard every day. It holds nothing back. If it learns of any so-called "inside information," such is put into the matter it prints as soon as possible and without special display. That's merely honesty of service. If I had a horse which I was sure was a million pounds better than the horse against which he had to contend on the morrow, he would be named to win. The odds be blowed. The winning way and the honest way is the only way for the turfman, newspaperman, merchant or preacher. A "fakir" meets a "fakir's" fate. I know a lot of men who "fake." I keep form about them as keenly as I keep it about the horse. I do not know ten of some 2,000 of such "fakirs" who are in clover. Those in clover are on the tab of future trouble.

We should all treat the turf as it is; not as it should be. That's mere utilitarianism. DAILY RACING FORM so treats it. The turf has its shady nooks. What human corner hasn't? There is much dirty printed matter about the turf—and the church. Printed matter is not very reliable in these days of ours. As digested, the turf's dirt isn't quite as dirty as the chronicles of other corners. Proof is at hand and on call. The opportunity of one corner, too, is about as broad as the other.

As it seems to me the calling of things by their proper names and the telling of the truth at all times about all items in use is the best system of reform all about human doings and misdoings. There are rich "cheaters" and poor "cheaters" in all business avenues. It seems as if the former predominate. In the effect of action as shown by figures, there isn't much doubt that they do.

Wealth is arrogant everywhere. Possession breeds dominance. The submission of poverty is as universal. Some of the stables owned by wealthy turfmen have a record of performance that would jog officialism into the shame of complexion, if officialism was not as lazy as it is. All this leads to the conclusion that there isn't any grade to the furtive turfman—or merchant. He may and does run his horses—or his goods—short, or deal and combine with others, according to his opportunities. The effect upon the public, which pays the piper, is the same, however.

This, too, all admits that there is fraud in horse racing. It will grow less as officialism grows more alert. The same fraud exists in all other lines of business—for the turf is a business. According to the chances offered by racing, I sincerely believe that the percentage of fraud in racing is less than that in all other commercial corners. The church is not barred in the term "other commercial corners."

The hi-ky-ism of this and that fellow, who goes into select corners and denounces the pastures he has left, disgusts a fair spectator of general human action. One such turfman says that racing in the East is cleaner than that in the West, and still another that England contains more turf honesty than America. Bosh!

Human nature isn't local. The same average rules in Kamschatka, England, Tasmania, Norway and America. It universally sharpens with the opportunity of action. But the average is still the same. The keener the "cheater" the larger his idea of profit. Therefore, to the general victim, luck comes through the dullness of class. The balance, however, is in that of sharpness of possession.

Side by side with the falsity of idea of these better-than-thouists, who pain a practical eye, is that of the preachery about the enforcement of turf progress by means of oppression. These sermons run along the line of advocacy of harsh and unreasonable laws and rules. Government is health—if it is reasonable. But the law that brands a man as almost a criminal for doing his best with what he has bought and is compelled to use for sustenance, is detestable and tyrannical. Such is the rule that has created the present "outlaw" band of owners, jockeys and horses. Discipline is healthy and necessary. The owner or jockey who seemed to repent and who secured a pardon upon the basis of repentance, deserves no second pardon. But the man who owned a band of cheap horses and was forced to race wherever he could to earn a living is as good a citizen as the millionaire who owned a band of horses and was not compelled to sustain himself through its earnings.

The American turf needs more commonsense and elasticity. It also needs more reasonable government. The right ruler and rules could classify its items and geographical conditions and legislate in such a way as to make restraint both comfortable and reasonable. Gilbert's Mikado whose "object all sublime," was "to make the punishment fit the crime," would be the proper sort of lawmaker for the American turf. I'd punish a rebel who sought strife and outlawry because he was "agin the government." That would be the mere health of action about regularity and order.

But there's mean and pinching bitterness of punishment in the outlawry of a fellow who had to race what he had because he couldn't go to a licensed track and had to sustain himself with what he had at the place he could reach. There's still more meanness and bitterness in the pinch to the horseman who was not "in" with the politics of Eastern or Western racing of his time and thus fell between the changeable wheels thereof and was defaced. There may be some excuse; but there isn't much philanthropy about the branding of a man as an outlaw upon a geographical basis. The present laws of racing do this. Geography isn't a good reformatory.

Racing classification seems to be necessary in America. It has become so in England. Outlawry will not do, though. It isn't a modern or a liberal system. A man with $1,000 invested in turf tools shouldn't be forced to compete with the owner of $50,000 worth of goods—or become a criminal. The rule that forces such competition is not a just rule. The effect sought by such a law is villainous. The $1,000 fellow, to naturally sustain himself, must be lucky—or cheat. He may be lucky and escape, but luck is not regular or natural and the cheating way is considering unreasonable conditions. An irregular or unrecognized turf group may be necessary to American racing. But an outlaw class is not.

It seems, too, that where the irregular or unrecognized class exists there should be a stimulating clause in the general laws of racing that will allow and even encourage an ambitious man to get out of "the prison of mean estate" and climb all walls of turf fame—should he have the goods and the will. Such a road for the journey of human ambition fits into the idea of American and human freedom. This is a gossip to horsemen on the basis of what I think after fully considering what has turned up in recent racing politics and action. I do not care how it suits this or that man's ideas.

Winner—Ch. c, 3, by Midlothian—Lurline.

Start good. Won in a hard drive. There were but two in the race. Horatio was best and is a colt with the courage of his namesake. Peixotto is a coward. He was badly ridden, too. He favors mud and needs strong handling. Don Carillo ran an improving race. He is still short. He leans toward soft footing. Jane was not in the right place. Chappie is of no account except for bench show purposes.

Scratched—Lucky Dog, 112; Bellicoso, 109.

Overweights—Horatio, 4 pounds.

Winner—Ch. g, 6, by Tyrant—Maylette.

Start good. All the first four were driving hard. Howard was much the best and none too well ridden. He began slowly and closed fast and strong. Remsen was lucky and suited by the going. So was Cook, who closed ground steadily. He was well ridden. Spunwell was clumsily handled. She is a dash filly and a coward. Lucky Star is worth tabbing for the early future. Monitor is good but only a sprinter. Tempo will bear watching. Closed a lot of ground. Blue was short. Kaiserin got an easy race.

Scratched—Suscol, 96; Gold Bug, 119; Spry Lark, 112.

Winner—Ch. c, 3, by Surinam—Paloma.

Start good. Won cleverly. Clarencio was far the best. His burst of speed at the finish was splendid. The going suited him. He was well managed and ridden after being interfered with at start. Behan was not in his favorite footing. He was hampered at the start and well ridden. The Dream was poorly handled. Throw out this race. The going favored Terra Archer, who is improving. Reiff was interfered with at the start and badly ridden. Lady Hurst, much used, weakened at the finish.

Overweights—Terra Archer, 4 pounds.
